EXAMINATION: ENG111 THE ART OF WRITING (1)INSTRUCTIONS: Question ONE is compulsory. Answer any other TWO questions.

Question 1.

- a) Read the passage below and answer the questions that follow it.

A thermos or vacuum flask can keep hot or cold liquids at the same temperature for about twenty four hours. This is because the bottle is constructed in such a way that it is difficult for heat to pass out or in. The outer part of the thermos flask is usually made of durable plastic or metal. The inner part is made of glass. This inner container is a bottle within a bottle. At the time the thermos flask is constructed, all the air space between the walls of the two bottles is sucked out and the resulting vacuum is sealed. It is this vacuum that stops the passage of heat from or to the inner bottle. Finally the facing walls of the two bottles are coated with a silvery solution, like the back of a mirror; as the silvering of a mirror reflects light waves, so the silvering of these surfaces turns back any heat waves that try to escape from or penetrate through the inner bottle. A little heat does pass through the glass walls or the rubber stopper, but very slowly, because glass, plastic, cork and rubber are all poor conductors of heat.
